

What could contribute to a high water bill besides leaking faucets and/or pipes?

Contributed by FAQ Master
Wednesday, 12 December 2007

Question:

What could contribute to a high water bill besides leaking faucets and/or pipes?

Answer:

Ninety percent of all leaks in residential plumbing systems are found in the toilet tank. Toilet tank leaks typically result from worn parts or improper alignment of some part of the flushing mechanism. It is very important to stop the leak. Stop the leak and stop the expensive water bill from hitting you every month.